FORTY-TWO YEARS
INSIDE FOUR WALLS

Some of These Sisters Have Not
Generation.

AT THE Catholic convent, which is hidden away behind the walls along Fort and Union streets, there are a number of women who have dwelt within the place for from thirty to forty-two years, without a glimpse of the outside world during the time, save that given from rarely visited windows.

To these meek and unworldly sisters, the existence year after year within the narrow confines of the walls, has been a matter of fact, and they have gone about their duties contentedly, teaching the pupils of the convent and conducting their devotions, without heed to the progress of the city or the happenings of the external world. They take no newspapers and read few secular books. The little children who have been sent to them for education have grown up and departed, giving way to the succeeding generations in the old-fashioned little school rooms of the convent, the sisters continuing to instill in the minds of their pupils the same conventional stipends of learning in accordance with the methods of fifty years ago, regardless of the march of progress in educational methods.

The coming and going of pupils have brought to the sisters almost their only glimpses of the outside world, and the changing atmosphere of things beyond the wall. The first party of ten nuns came across from France in 1859, immediately entering the convent, the oldest one among them being forty years of age, and the youngest, eighteen. Since the day they passed demurely into the convent gate, when Honolulu was a mere village of grass huts and small wooden dwellings, these women have remained within the four walls of the place, only going forth on the occasion of a funeral of one of their number, being driven in hacks to the cemetery. Some of the sisters have not even attended a funeral, among these being two of the original party who entered the convent forty-two years ago. One of these is now over eighty years of age, and though frail and feeble, is still active in the work of teaching, and by her exemplary devotion and humility gives example to the younger mothers and sisters. Six of the original ten have passed away and been carried out through the convent gates and laid away in the cemetery. Four remain. The original party were followed by a number of other sisters in 1864, and in 1870 another party came over the waters from France. Others have come from time to time, and death has claimed many of them.

The others will continue to live within the confines of the four walls, attending to the duties of the school-rooms, and embroidering sacred heart emblems for their raiment, until they, too, shall be carried over the threshold to the cemetery.

At the present time rebuilding is going on, and the quiet of the silent place is broken. It is vacation time, and the school rooms are empty. The sisters have sought the rooms farthest from the noise of the hammer and saw. When they go out into the grounds their white gowns are covered with a black, age-greened mantle, and their hoods drawn low over their faces as they pass the workmen who are attending to the rebuilding. When the work is completed the unusual atmosphere of disturbance will depart, the sisters again settling down to quiet and solitude, with the hurrying and progressive world outside.

On a blackboard in one of the school rooms is written in a steep old-fashioned hand, for the guidance of the students of history who are now frisking about in the liveliness of vacation, the following undisputed fact: "Columbus, an Italian Catholic, discovered the new world in 1492."

This is typical of the quaint old methods of teaching which are still adhered to by the isolated nuns who have in charge the education of the small, progressive and up-to-date urchins and little girls of the Catholic persuasion. "Tell me," asked a sister not long ago, "in which direction from here is the harbor?"

Entered a House.

The police are on the watch out for a Makiki trespasser. On the night of the Stockyards fire, just after the whistle blew, a man entered the house of Mrs. Harry Hayselden, whose husband is out of the city on business. Mrs. Hayselden was sitting up with a sick child, a nurse being with her at the time. Curiously, the interloper walked down the hall and knocked at the door. Mrs. Hayselden elevated her voice and spoke to the nurse, telling her to go into the next room and get the revolver. The man then went away and muddy tracks were found on a white rug in the hall and the outside window was open. It is suspected that the fellow is a Chinese, and the police will watch diligently for him.

THE "FIZZ" WE DRINK.

The American market for champagne varies less than in the case of other foreign wines, though the importations of last year were 200,000 dozens as against 340,000 ten years ago. The figure was exceptionally high; last year's importations were below the average.

The fluctuations which carried the importations down to 170,000 dozen in 1891 carried them up to 215,000 dozen two years later.

VALUABLE BIBLICAL MS.

Parts of a magnificent manuscript of the Gospel of St. Matthew were found last year near Sinope and bought for the Bibliotheque Nationale at Paris. Two of the pages which were missing have been recently discovered at Maripol, on the Sea of Azov, and bought by the local museum. The volume was made of vellum, tinted with purple and written in large golden uncials in Greek.

DESERVED TO BURN.

A fire recently broke out at Hermannsreuth, an Austrian village near the Bavarian frontier. A Bavarian fire brigade, which was stationed only three miles away, hastened to the rescue, but the Austrian custom house authorities refused to allow the fire engines to pass the frontier without paying the usual tax on imported machinery. The Bavarian firemen naturally turned back, and half the village was burned down before the Austrian fire brigade could reach the scene.
